

The Lifers (preview)

I have over 20 names, I organize them by town, month and the people I've maintained. It's easy to say, wow that's my name, when meeting a woman at a park or bar. Married or divorced, they're usually the most in need of excitement, mystery and a challenge. Elaborate stories are for those who want glory, or want to get caught. For instance, she allowed me to get close enough to identify her as a lifer when I she mentioned being divorced for 4 days and losing her wedding ring after wearing it for 9 years. She didn't have a tan, she also didn't look at or move her hand in any way to symbolize the change that I goaded her into. She was too busy trying to keep me in her confidence. She missed the fact that I lost all understanding of trust a long time ago.
